Palace also says it's clueless on 5 cliques

By Norman Bordadora and Alcuin Papa

MALACAÑANG YESTERDAY said Interior Undersecretary Rico E. Puno should provide evidence to back his claim that cliques in President Aquino's administration wanted him out and were behind talk that he was receiving multimillion-peso payola from operators of the illegal numbers racket "jueteng."

The President's deputy spokesperson, Abigail Valte, said the Palace did not know what to make of Puno's statements to the Inquirer editors and reporters on Thursday night that Local Government Secretary Jesse Robredo and administration hands from both the "Balay" and "Samar" cliques were behind a purported smear campaign against him.

"Perhaps … we should ask Undersecretary Puno what is the basis for the things that he said because we don't have the information that would [serve as] basis for any comment on the matter," Valte told government-run radio station dzRB.

"He is the best person to shed light on his statement," she said of Puno, a long-

Belmonte: ₱50M each for solons is not 'pork'

By Michael Lim Ubac

THE RULING Liberal Party does not consider the additional ₱50 million that they were able to wring from Malacañang—to be taken from the lump-sum funds of the Department of Public Works and Highways next year—as pork barrel.

Speaker Feliciano Belmonte Jr. yesterday flatly denied any "pork inflation in 2011," saying that the controversial pork, euphemistically referred to as the Priority Development Assistance Fund (PDAF), stays at ₱70 million.

Press reports yesterday said that following a threat from administration allies in the House to hold up

M. Lopez appointed RP envoy to Japan

By Juliet Labog-Javellana and Fe B. Zamora

IN HIS FIRST two ambassadorial appointments, President Aquino has named a family friend and a prominent political supporter to head the Philippine embassies in Japan and the Vatican.

Manuel M. Lopez, who formerly headed the Manila Electric Co., will be the country's new ambassador to Tokyo, while Mercedes Arrastia-Tuason has been retained as envoy to the Holy See.

Lopez, one of five ambassadors that Mr. Aquino said he has chosen for various foreign missions, is a key political supporter of Mr. Aquino. The President did not name the three other new envoys.

Tuason, who was appointed to the Vatican post last year by former President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo and is a cousin-in-law of Arroyo's husband, was a close friend of Mr. Aquino's late mother, former President Corazon Aquino.

Lopez will be replacing Domingo Siazon Jr., one of the country's most experienced

FOR SEVERAL YEARS, Carla (not her real name), 16, was wary of interacting with men. Her nagging mistrust began when a male relative attempted to rape her when she was 12.

"I couldn't believe someone I once looked up to would try to rape me," she said. "I was very young when we were abandoned by my father, and then that episode happened. I became angry. I didn't feel at peace."

Before it was too late, Carla's mom, a single parent trying to make both ends meet raising her and a younger sibling, sent her to live at Tuloy sa Don Bosco, a foundation for orphaned, abused, abandoned and at-risk kids.

Better students from better teachers

By Angel Tianson-Saccob
Zamboanga City

TOMORROW, we will do jigsaw," a grade-schooler from Sta. Maria Central School in Zamboanga City brags in Chavacano to a fellow student.

The students are excited to attend classes to learn new lessons, so it's no surprise that the school has been the top among the 12 central schools in the city for the past three years.

Dr. Faly Asuthano, the principal, credits the school's success to peer-teacher training under the Learning Partnership Program (LPP) of the Department of Education (DepEd). In 2008, the US Agency for International Development (USAID) started supporting the LPP's implementation in 741 public elementary schools in conflict-affected areas in Mindanao, including Sta. Maria Central School.

"The program "has put us on the top place," Asuthano said, citing increases in National Achievement Test (NAT) scores over the years. "Clearly, it was because of our teachers' improved teaching capacities, which resulted in better performance among our students," she said.

In 2005, the school's NAT mean percentage score (MPS) was 77.00 percent. When it started implementing the LPP in 2006, the MPS steadily grew from [illegible] to [illegible] in 2009. It is performing well in all the subjects covered by the exam, which included English, Science and Math subjects.

Countrywide, this year's overall NAT score of [illegible] percent showed a [illegible]-percent improvement over the 2006 result of 54.66. That's only [illegible] points away from the passing score of 75.

Former Education Secretary Jesli Lapus credited the improvement to the LPP and other DepEd programs.

TEACHERS and students interact at Sta. Maria Central School in Zamboanga City.

Professional dev't

The LPP is an open and learner-centered approach to professional development of teachers. It aims to enhance teachers' competency in teaching English, Science, Math and other subjects through school- and district-based peer learning circles, study groups and small group training workshops.

Emphasis is placed on the teachers' clustering selected concepts that are based on the students' least-learned competencies as gleaned from their NAT scores, and on the teachers' least-learned competencies as gathered from their assessments.

"The LPP can be a formal gathering of several teachers with one taking the lead, or an informal one-on-one session in the guise of an afternoon chat. It's a very flexible practice. And as the principal, I conduct follow-through evaluation," Asuthano said.

The uniqueness of the program is that it sees teachers as partners sharing their experiences, skills and knowledge to improve each other's teaching capacity. It is even more acceptable among teachers because it recognizes the fact that teachers take turns in becoming a "learning facilitator" depending on the discipline and topic that they have identified as a "learning goal."

"The teachers had to realize and understand the potential of the program for it to work. At first, they were uncomfortable with the idea, especially with a younger teacher coaching an older teacher," Asuthano explained.

Core subjects

To strengthen the English, Science and Math content knowledge, as well as the teaching and classroom management strategies and techniques of the teacher-mentors ("learning facilitators") the USAID, through its Education Quality and Access for Learning and Livelihood Skills (EQuALLS2) Project, has been training them on each core subject while providing reference books and teaching-learning materials.

Asuthano and selected learning facilitators took the lead in providing echo trainings and one-on-one sessions with other teachers.

Yvonnie Dagohoy, an English learning facilitator of Sta. Maria Central School, shared that the LPP is working because of teamwork, not only among the teachers and the principal, but also at the district and division levels.

Collaborative planning and evaluation ensure the continuity of the program.

"It calls for a positive attitude and the willingness to learn, in the process of which we build stronger friendships," Dagohoy said.

"Through the LPP, I gained the confidence to take the lead among my fellow teachers, and at the same time, I gained their trust. We became more open to each other, and we continue to share ideas, especially solutions to admitted weaknesses in teaching," she added.

Teaching strategies

Asuthano acknowledged that one of her teachers' weaknesses was in the application of various teaching strategies. The new techniques and approaches shared in the core trainings, which were echoed to other teachers, resulted in improved student interest in learning and enhanced participation in class, which increased the rate of school attendance.

Asuthano is only too fond of hearing students talking about their lessons even after classes.

"At the end of the day they are still very excited. It just shows that the teachers have done well, and that makes me a very proud principal," she said.

Partners for world-class health care

MakatiMed launches Strategic Hospital Alliance Program

LEADING health institution Makati Medical Center is partnering with the hospitals of CALABARZON (Cavite, Laguna, Batangas and Quezon), one of the fastest growing regions in the country, to expand world-class health care services to South Luzon through the Strategic Hospital Alliance Program (SHAP).

Strategic Hospital Alliance Program

Launched last July, the pioneering program seeks to partner with select medical institutions in the country. In turn, partner hospitals may refer patients to MakatiMed, where they can have access to its facilities and services such as highly-specialized laboratory tests. Patients are also set to gain from the latest research and development initiatives undertaken by MMC.

"MakatiMed and its partner hospitals share a common goal and that is to bring excellent and high quality health care services to our patients. SHAP is an expression of our commitment to deliver on this promise," Dina Paraiso, Vice President for Sales, Business Planning and Development, says.

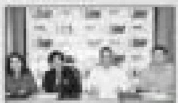

Through SHAP, MakatiMed's partner hospitals can gain access to critical diagnostic equipment and tools that would otherwise require substantial investments. These include imaging and diagnostic machines to detect rare types of tumors and cancers as well as complicated laboratory procedures such as DNA testing and cardiac markers, among others.

"These kinds of equipment are quite expensive to acquire for a relatively smaller hospital in the province because they may not have the critical mass to recover the investment. Plus, these get outdated pretty fast as newer models are introduced, so in a way we take the risk for them," Paraiso explains.

For MakatiMed, the program likewise serves as a more sustainable alternative to opening satellite clinics in other areas of Metro Manila and its neighboring provinces in South Luzon.

MakatiMed's SHAP partners in South Luzon are: in Metro Manila, Parañaque Doctors Hospital and Associated Medical and Clinical Services (AMCS), the first partner clinic for the program; Bautista Hospital, Our Lady of the Pillar Medical Center, and Tagaytay Hospital and Medical Center in Cavite; Mary Mediatrix Medical Center, Metro Lipa Medical Center and St. Patrick's Hospital Medical Center in Batangas; and Calamba Doctors Hospital, Calamba Medical Center, San Pablo Doctors Hospital, Southern Luzon Hospital and Medical Center, and Sta. Rosa Hospital and Medical Center in Laguna. Before the end of the year, MakatiMed also aims to roll out the SHAP program to other parts of Luzon as well as the Visayas and Mindanao regions.

SO NEAR YET SO FAR. The TelePresence setup makes it look like participants from other countries, who joined the children from Asociacion de Damas Filipinas, are just across the table from their teacher.

GLOBAL INTERACTION

Metro kids learn art direct from S'pore

By Jaymee T. Gamil

IT WAS an art class so big the students were in the Philippines and the teacher in Singapore.

Twelve countries and a passionate young artist banded together on Oct. 2 in an attempt to break the Guinness World Record for the largest art lesson ever conducted.

But unlike the other art lessons he conducted for free across the globe in the past, this time, Singaporean artist Peter Zhuo Ying Wei, professionally known as Peter Draw, did not leave his country and visit areas one by one. All he needed to do was show up at a nearby Cisco office and meet children across Asia, Australia and the United States simultaneously via TelePresence.

Cisco is a multinational pioneer of computer networking solutions. TelePresence is a technology much like video chatting—except it uses on high-definition televisions and uses a connection so that it can convey clear visuals and audio in real time.

To celebrate the company's 25th anniversary, Cisco's TelePresence allowed Draw to interact with 1,000 people in 34 locations all at the same time. "Why are you all so cute?" the 26-year-old Draw gushed as he saw the kids, his chinky eyes disappearing into a smile.

Across the seas

Kids from the Philippines, Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia, Korea, Japan, United States, Australia, Hong Kong, India and Malaysia trooped to their local Cisco offices and, just like that, found themselves being able to wave at Draw and to each other.

The Filipino contingent in Makati was composed of 18 children from the local Cisco staff and 20 underprivileged kids from the Asociacion de Damas Filipinas settlement in Paco, Manila.

Asociacion, established in Manila in 1919, serves as a temporary home and school for orphaned, abandoned and neglected children aged six months to 7 years old.

Seated before a half-circle conference table with three large television screens in front of them, also in a half-circle position, the arrangement made it look like Draw and the children waiting for the art lessons to start were just sitting across each other.

A small projection in front, below the center screen broadcasting Draw, showed what was on his desk so that drawing demonstrations were aired in real time.

Way of life

"This is not just an art lesson or a world record. This is about teaching a way of life, like kindness. I want to show it is very easy to be kind to people," said Draw in a TelePresence interview.

Draw pursues his goal of "making the saddest children happy through drawing" whether it is convenient or not for him to do so.

An art teacher in Singapore since he was 18, Draw conducts his one-and-a-half-hour art classes by drawing the story and its characters, teaching children that simple acts, like a hug or a compliment, could change someone's world.

"It's much like one stroke turning a sad face into a happy face," he demonstrated, adding a U-shaped line under a caricature frown and making a cartoon girl's mouth look like it opened in laughter.

Advocacy

Draw's advocacy comes from experiences growing up as a poor boy himself. As a child, he was once turned out from an art lesson because he couldn't afford the $40 fee. "The artist said nasty things about me. He pushed me out and slammed the door in my face," he recalled.

With his grandfather's encouragement, Draw forged on with his dreams. He has now broken two other world records, one for the largest caricature, a 300-sq-m cartoon of Hong Kong superstar Jackie Chan, and the other for drawing around 1,000 people in 24 hours to raise funds for a homeless family in Batam, Indonesia.

The best drawings from the TelePresence art lesson will be made into Christmas greeting cards. Proceeds will go to charities Cisco supports worldwide.

ROAD GAME

Gin Kings defang Tigers

By [illegible]

BARANGAY GINEBRA held Powerade scoreless in the final three and a half minutes to come away with an 82-75 triumph last night for its first victory of the season in a PBA All-Filipino Cup road game in Batangas City.

The Gin Kings nearly put to waste a 13-point halftime lead, allowing the Tigers to tie the game at 75 heading into the last 3:37.

But the Gin Kings put the clamps on the Tigers in the final stretch while drawing clutch plays from Ronald Tubid and Rudy Hatfield to tie their victims with a 1-1 record.

Hatfield stripped Chico Lanete of possession and fed Tubid for a breakaway layup, before Tubid followed up his own miss in the final minute to give the Gin Kings an 81-75 lead.

4 p.m. — Barako Bull vs Meralco
6:30 p.m. — Talk 'N Text vs San Miguel

Willie Miller led Ginebra with 13 points, while six other teammates scored at least eight points in a balanced attack.

Only Gary David, with 27 points, and Mark Macapagal, with 13, were the only Tigers who scored in double figures.

Meanwhile, newcomer Meralco seeks to build on its impressive opening-day victory when it tangles with Barako Bull today even as Talk 'N Text and San Miguel collide in a clash of [illegible] favorites.

The Bolts, who nipped the Ginebra Gin Kings, 73-72, last Sunday are favored to roll past the Energy, a team sorely lacking offensive firepower, in the 4 p.m. duel at the Cuneta Astrodome.

The Tropang Texters and the Beermen are also eyeing the early lead in the tournament in their 6:30 p.m. clash after rolling past their respective rivals in their season debuts.

Talk 'N Text proved it had more than enough firepower even without the injured Ranidel de Ocampo, crushing a depleted B-Meg Derby Ace squad, 87-75, last Wednesday.

San Miguel, with Danilo Ildefonso finding his range, gave a retooled Air21 team a rude welcome to the season with a 100-80 rout last Friday.

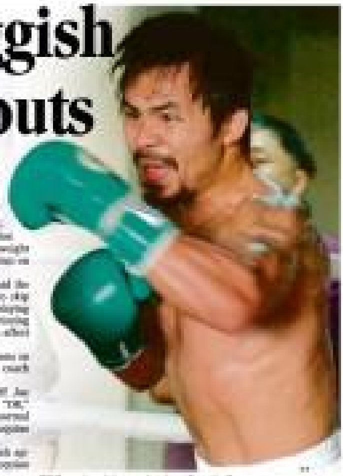

Mark Cardona, who hit the game-winner against the Gin Kings, is expected to hold the fort anew for the Bolts, who also drew an inspired effort from rookie Shawn Weinstein.

The 5-foot-11 Weinstein, the 10th pick in the draft, shot only six points in his debut, but provided a calm and composed presence at the backcourt for the Bolts.

Barako Bull's campaign got off on a losing note as the Energy absorbed a [illegible] debut to the Alaska Aces Friday night.

A new era dawns for country's healthcare needs

The Baypointe Hospital and Medical Center brings much welcome upgrade in Philippine hospitalization standards

By Kenneth M. del Rosario

It's about elevating the standard of health care delivery as we know it today. By bringing together in one roof the promise of health, wellness, leisure, and relaxation, the country's traditional perception of hospital service is bound to get a welcome improvement and much-deserved upgrade. Baypointe Hospital and Medical Center (BHMC) is a modern, private-tertiary hospital that is envisioned to provide the highest quality medical care for its patients as well as to catering to potentials of retirement health and medical tourism market. Located at Moonbay Marina in the heart of the business district of Subic Bay Freeport Zone, the new hospital aims to serve patients and constituents in the areas of Olongapo, Zambales, Bataan and Pampanga. BHMC opens its doors to the public on today, October 10, 2010, three years after the project's conceptualization. With an authorized capacity of 100 beds, BHMC is to look after the healthcare needs of the more than 62,000 workers and executives of multinational companies operating inside the Subic Bay Freeport Zone.

"The hospital will be an icon of the UNIHEALTH Group of Hospitals," said Dr. Enriquez, the company's chairman of the board. "BHMC is a great boon and is a breakthrough in the Philippine health care industry." According to Dr. De Leon, BHMC's president and CEO, the hospital would house a complete set of the latest facilities and equipment such as Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI), Computerized Tomography scan, general, 2D and 4D Ultrasound machines, and Dialysis equipment.

The hospital has 12 fully-functional operating room theaters, each distinct and separate for the medical sector that it serves.

BHMC strikes a perfect balance with Subic Bay's bustling economy and its laid and active lifestyle, the chairman said.

With a corporation composed of 37 founders founded in 2006, BHMC held its groundbreaking in August 18, 2007. A little more than a year after that, construction began.

The hospital is the fifth project in a series of respectable state-of-the art facilities that had been built by the founders.

BHMC is a 5-storey building with a total lot area of 11,000 square meters. The hospital basement serves as spacious parking area with a plan to accommodate a psychiatric ward. The ground level houses the lobby, emergency room, radiology and other diagnostic services.

The doctors' clinics are located on the second floor level. Private rooms, suite rooms and wards, on the other hand, are on the third and fourth level of the hospital.

What makes BHMC unique is the its roof deck a feature that affords a very impressive view of Subic Bay water area and a panoramic view of the Olongapo City skyline.

The hospital boasts of a marvelous roster of consultants renowned in their specific specializations and sub-specializations.

Departmentalized services include ER Medicine, Internal Medicine, General Surgery, Laparoscopic Surgery, Reconstructive Surgery, Obstetrics and Gynecology, Pediatrics and Rehabilitation Medicine.

The hospital offers state-of-the art diagnostic services like two-dimensional echocardiogram, four-dimensional ultrasound for OB-Gyn, CT scan and MRI and Nuclear Medicine. The chairman said: "The scale of what we have accomplished in such a short time allows us to embrace the future with well-based confidence and hope. Cheers to BHMC and its bright future."

Not so forbidding city

Or how to enjoy this awesome landmark amid awesome human traffic

Text and photos by [illegible]
Contributor

THE ORIGINAL, pre-Revolution name for the Forbidden City had as much to do with the fact that the Palace was a mirror of the celestial realms as the fact that it was off limits. Yet, for many travel promoters, it was always worthwhile to capitalize on the former imperial residence's image of inaccessibility.

In the promotional clips featuring [illegible] that aired on TV during the Olympics, one notes the repeated mention of words like "mysterious" and "secretive." Evidently, audiences all over the world continue to be fascinated by the thought of this huge majestic enclave which for centuries was open only to the privileged few.

Today of course, the Forbidden City may be scrutinized by anyone who can pay the admission price. About 10 million visitors amble through its halls each year generating revenues equivalent to several billion pesos annually. One must, therefore, be ready to wade through a sea of humanity for the chance to gaze upon the fabled environment of the former Emperors of China.

Those of a more solitary bent are advised to get to the Forbidden City early or very late to beat the crowds. Intrepid tour guides have even suggested using the north or back gate so that one's path goes counter to the usual flow. Though this means being able to enter the compound more easily, one will still have to contend with the mob when viewing the main Halls.

By taking the back entrance, one is deprived of the first glimpse of the majestic Hall of Celestial Harmony dominating the immense main courtyard. There are few other vistas on this earth which can compare. Standing there, contemplating the vast expanses, one understands a bit more just why the Chinese have always believed that their country was the center of the universe.

After this initial breathtaking view, it is time to steel one's self to take the plunge into the pandemonium which attends any perusal of the Dragon Throne. There is probably no way to avoid this. But there are certainly ways to make the experience less nerve-wracking.

Though I would enter through the south, I would not take the gate that overlooks Tiananmen Square. I suppose that this great portal with its huge portrait of Mao Ze Dong has become so iconic that everyone heads for it automatically. I would take the side road directly to the Meridian gate. This is actually where the ticket stations are located. One should remember to check which line is shorter since there are booths on both sides.

It may also be helpful to use the nearby comfort rooms before beginning one's tour. Though there are equivalent facilities inside the Palace, they may not always be easy to find. In China, if one cannot speak the language, it is a good idea to have flash cards on which essential concepts are printed in [illegible]

NOT SO /G2

EMPTY grand corridors

Not so forbidding city

Chinese Sideways Stamped Exit Tablet.

While waiting to enter, one should take the time to examine the Phoenix gate itself. I would scrutinize the two encircling wings which give the building the appearance of a great bird in flight, hence its name. Interestingly, there is a replica of this building at the entrance to the Forbidden City of the Vietnamese Emperors in Hue.

The immensity and grandeur of Beijing's imperial compound are such that after a while the mind shuts down. There one feels only a sense of drudgery while marching across endless enclosures, eager to get to the very end. It is easier to comprehend this fantastic abode if one understands that even the way the buildings are positioned has a story to tell.

The Forbidden City follows the Chinese art of feng shui which dictates that residences face south, the direction whence come all good things. Feng shui also stresses the importance of having a stream in front and a mountain in the back. As such, there is, in fact, a rivulet that flows through the first courtyard of the Palace.

This forms an archer's bow, possibly a shape which evokes the Emperor's power to repel his enemies. In the same vein, there is actually a hill topped by a pavilion that guards the rear of the Forbidden City. This configuration of flowing water and mountain is reflected in many villages—even in the most remote corners of the great realm of China—linking the humblest hamlet with the beating heart of the Empire.

I would also take time to study the symbolism that suffuses the Palace. Note, for example, that the primary doors have nine rows of knobs as nine was the imperial number.

The most recent avatar of the Karate Kid made me aware for the first time that touching these knobs was supposed to bring good luck. This is probably a new practice, arising more from the dictates of tourism rather than tradition. One will see many visitors sheepishly rubbing the golden knobs as they pass by. I suspect, though, that if one were caught doing this when the Emperor still ruled China, one's future would be anything but blessed!

In making my progress from south to north, I would not keep to the central axis like the rest of humanity. I would take the walkways on the very edge of the courtyard. Though one would still have to go back to the center to see the interiors of the grand ceremonial halls, taking the side corridors would afford some moments of peace.

From this tranquil perspective, one has a better chance to perceive that the City has three huge public halls which correspond to three smaller ones that were for the personal life of the Emperor and his family.

It is in what used to be the family section of the Palace that one will find the most fascinating but often overlooked displays of the Forbidden City: the exhibits in the Hall of Clocks.

In centuries past, when European merchants were still begging to be allowed to enter China's doors, clocks were used to pique the interest of the Celestial monarch. China, like most of the other civilizations of the world, conceived of time in terms of cycles. Dynasties rose and fell in keeping with the waxing and waning which was the pattern of life.

Europe alone thought of time as one endless line which had to be measured in hours and minutes. As such, Europeans became adept at creating chronometers to capture the passing of days.

Eventually the Chinese would learn from the West the art of clockmaking. The Imperial Collection includes wonderful pieces from both Europe and China, fashioned from gold and other precious materials. Everywhere one looks there are tiny trees glistening with pearls, there are minute pagodas with enameled roofs.

There are even figures that move: a man writes on paper, a woman cools herself with a feathered fan.

The writer Eugene Bastien reminded me of an exquisite tale by Hans Christian Andersen. It is said that there was once an Emperor who discovered that the greatest treasure in his fabulous realm was actually a nightingale that sang so sweetly. Yet this lowly bird was later replaced by a jeweled mechanical replica which eventually broke down, bringing the distraught monarch to the brink of death. Looking at the amazing objects in the Hall of Clocks, one realizes that there was some truth to Andersen's tale.

The Chinese were truly capable of creating automatons. But was there also an Emperor who would realize that the true riches of his empire paled before a nightingale's serenade?

In fact, there was one lord of the Forbidden City who declared he would give up luxurious trappings of the Dragon Throne for a life of quiet contemplation. He would build a retreat that is now named after him: The Qianlong Garden. This Garden is today one of the most tranquil areas of the Palace. It is here that I like to end my tour.

Tall stands of convoluted rocks across the enclosure from pavilion. There is even a meandering stream dedicated to literary pursuits. Here, one was supposed to toss in a cup and before this floated out of sight, one should already have spontaneously composed a poem. A few years ago, the World Monuments Fund sponsored the restoration of a hall in the Qianlong Garden. Once more, the exquisite paintings that decorated the walls of the Emperor's personal theater were revitalized.

Unfortunately, the beautiful hall is not open to the public at the present time. In a way this makes sense given the hordes that surge through the Forbidden City every year. Moreover, it seems appropriate that not all areas in the Qianlong Emperor's retreat are accessible. As it had always been, so shall it be: There are still some things in the Palace that remain beyond our reach.

She wants to leave her husband, who is now a stranger to her

EMILY'S POST
Emily A. Marcos

DEAR EMILY,

I am 32 years old, married for 10 years now and have one child.

My problem started when I joined my husband abroad where he's working. He was a good provider when we were still physically apart. But now it seems that everyday I am compelled to leave him. Our situation makes me feel that I am married to a stranger. He treats me like a house help, and my opinions are of no value to him.

I used to be very independent but for some reason I don't know anymore. What do I do? —Lost in my own home

Answer

Your relationship with your husband was completely different when he was living abroad and all alone. He felt he missed you then and longed for you in his mind. But the mind can do tricks in the psyche of a person and your separation allowed him to be a different man from what you see in him now.

If you feel you've been living with a stranger, do what you're supposed to do with a stranger.

Get to know him again. Talk. Allow him to get to know you as well. Try to take baby steps in this relationship and not gallop away with the familiar. Don't rush headlong into taking the entire history of your loves and dislikes as this may alienate him further. Ask simple, non-argumentative questions. Offer insights on what he didn't know about your own personality. Have moments of silence when you're together. Be espresso.

> In this relationship, do not gallop away with the familiar one. This will allow him to wonder about what you're thinking and take notice of you as a person. Isn't that what you want to happen?

Don't be discouraged if this plan seems terribly and (contra)tive in the beginning. Trying to rekindle an awkward situation with someone you are beginning to dislike can be hard work. You have to plod along. Bite your lips when you're about to give him exactly what he's giving you. It's human nature to fight back. But think long term here. A lifetime. Your goal of achieving peace and happiness in the long run will not only benefit you, but your whole family as well. Don't allow this ensuing invitation in your marriage develop into a wound that could fester and develop into gangrene.

To paraphrase Mahatma Gandhi, "You must be the change you wish to see in the world."

REUBEN Uy, Red Concepcion, Tony Gacracho, Bea Garcia and Fiabilo Kabayao headlined the Power Plant Mall's presentation of "It's a Grand Night for Singing," the Broadway musical revue featuring songs from the Rodgers and Hammerstein songbook.

Full-length musical in a mall—for free

THE POWER PLANT Mall offered another mall innovation this week: a full Broadway musical presented in the middle of a mall—the first of its kind in the country, and for free.

Using the unique viewing experience of theater in the round, where the audience surrounds the performance at all angles, The Power Plant staged the Broadway hit "It's A Grand Night For Singing" by Rodgers and Hammerstein, at The Concourse, the Power Plant's dining area, at 7 p.m. last Oct. 6-7.

Customers dining in the surrounding food outlets enjoyed the experience while savoring their food or sipping their favorite drinks.

Starring singer-dancer and accomplished theater actor Red Concepcion (who last starred in "Xquisit"), Reuben Abdallah (star Reuben Uy (Stanley Rowalski in Tanghalang Pilipino's "A Streetcar Named Desire"), dramatic actress and singer Bea Garcia (of Atlantis Productions' "Spring Awakening"), violinist and actress Fiabilo Kabayao (who played the Fiddler in Repertory Philippines' "Fiddler on the Roof") and professional dancer, actor and singer Tony Gacracho (Zaffiro in Dalisang UP) managing of "Occasion at Zaffiro"). "It's A Grand Night For Singing" showcased the music of Richard Rodgers and the lyrics of Oscar Hammerstein II. It took Broadway by storm when it was first staged in 1993.

Like the TV show "Glee," the play is a musical revue—a musical that "mashes" songs from different musicals together and weaves them into a different story and context. It features songs from "South Pacific," "The King and I," "State Fair," "Carousel," "Oklahoma!" and "The Sound of Music."

The musical was originally presented cabaret-style at Rainbow & Stars at the top of Rockefeller Center. It ran for 52 performances and was nominated for two Tony Awards (Best Musical, Best Book of a Musical) and the Drama Desk Award for Outstanding Revue.

Directed by stage actress Ana Abad Santos and choreographed by dancer and choreographer Nancy Perlas, "It's A Grand Night For Singing" also headlined the Manila Chamber Orchestra, with musical direction by Onyl Torres.

"The Power Plant Mall is always thinking of ways to bring shopping, dining and leisure time to a whole new dimension for our shoppers and guests," said Shah Tamos, Marketing Supervisor, Rockwell Land Corporation. "We try to bring them the latest trends and the most memorable experience they could possibly get in a mall. Their response to our Reel Harmonic Series—where we put the Philharmonic Orchestra on different levels of the Power Plant Mall for a truly powerful musical mall experience—inspired us to bring mall entertainment one notch higher. That's why we thought of this full musical in a mall as a fitting sequel."

THE ACTORS performed on a stage set up at The Concourse, the Power Plant's dining area.
